

INO Therapeutics wins Zenith Award

INO Therapeutics has won the American Association for Respiratory Care (AARC) Zenith Award for 2006. The Zenith Award, AARC's top industry recognition award, is presented to companies that the membership of AARC select based upon the company's reputation for providing superior products and services.

The 2006 Zenith Award was presented to INO Therapeutics at the AARC 52nd Annual International Respiratory Congress in Las Vegas, Nevada on Monday, December 11, 2006.

"We are honored to be recognized by the membership of the AARC. INO Therapeutics strives to provide great products and services to our Respiratory Care customers, and winning the 2006 Zenith Award is proof that we are achieving our goal," said Gary Pyner, Senior Director of Global Marketing and Business Development at INO Therapeutics. "INO Therapeutics will continue to work diligently to please the Respiratory audience."

The AARC established the Zenith Award program in 1989 to honor respiratory care product and service providers for exemplary service. Members of the AARC, greater than 41,000 in number, choose the recipients in a special election. Candidates are judged using a number of criteria, including: the quality of delivered goods; the accessibility and clinical helpfulness of the sales force; the responsiveness and service record; of the service group; and the overall support provided by the company to respiratory care professionals. In 2006 INO Therapeutics joins the ranks of the best companies in the respiratory market.